

Over the arctic

BY LUIGI DE BERNARDINI | SUN NOV 10 2013

Heading US it happens sometimes to fly over the arctic. When you fly to the southern states the route typically goes north over Iceland and Arctic to proceed down over the Canadian big lakes and forward. It happened this time flying to Houston.

The scenery you can see is really gorgeous. It's something so different from what you are used to that really takes the breath. No clouds, no smog, the sun projecting deep shadows, a white land broken by deep blue veins and spotted by ice peaks.

I believe it's one of the most astonishing views I ever seen.
